Lacrimal syringing

Watering eyes can be a temporary nuisance for many people, but for others it can be a long-standing problem.

If you experience watery eyes then a consultation with one of our optometrists will help to uncover the cause.

Lacrimal syringing is a potential treatment that can be painlessly and quickly performed in the practice. A syringe is used to gently probe the drainage duct of the eye and check for any blockages that may be restricting the drainage of tears.

Lacrimal syringing can also be used to wash out the duct, and will in some cases, flush out the blockage, thus removing the cause of the watering eyes.

Please visit cameronoptom.com/syringing for further information on this treatment. If you would like an opportunity to discuss your suitability for the treatment, then contact the practice to speak with one of our optometrists.
